Everything except plastic

Crowded inside of MaiA
No wonder because of given functionality

„I do have something special, which looks so small and understated to be easily ignored, but once in action it is unmistakable.“

A few days after the hifi show an extremely compact & lightweight (1850gr) integrated amplifier showed up, which makes believe to be also a D/A converter, an up-to-date Bluetooth receiver, a phono preamp and a headphone amplifier. The distributor also stated, that this tiny dwarf is well versed in any discipline and with 500 Euro fairly priced.

Combined with CD Box S, this setup costing a lot less than 1000 Euros kept us faithless and wondering, when realizing the small size of this amp and his digital companion.

The chuzpa of this smart amp conceived in Austria astonished everyone, when teasing out delicate sounds from its small metal casing. Speedy and clear with high resolution, without being overcool, the piano chords could be heard.

Neat manufacturing and really honest sound is something that also can be done in Europe, when draft is clever and quantity is adequate.

Pro-Ject is still pushing the limits:
A half-pint amplifier called MaiA,
that also acts as A/D converter and headphone amp, wants to show them the ropes ...
